

Cracks in Islam: Anticipating the Victory

Historians believe that Hitler's bombing of London was his most serious mistake in World War II. Certainly the Japanese sneak attack on Pearl Harbor was their greatest miscalculation. It is now becoming evident that the Islamic attack of September 11, 2001 on New York and Washington D.C., was probably the most foolish act ever committed by Muslim radicals.

Now the Muslim extremists must deal with a President who means what he says. Look at what has happened since 9/11. The radical Islamic Taliban regime in Afghanistan is destroyed and the scattered remnant are hiding in caves, while the country has held its first free elections.

Then Iraq, the Muslim world's most powerful military superpower, is humbled within a few weeks and the arrogant Saddam Hussein, found cowering in a spider hole, now sits in prison while millions of his fellow countrymen went to the poles to freely elect a new leader to represent their interests.

For 38 years Nigeria had suffered under a series of Islamic despotic dictators. The 12 Northern provinces enforced Sharia law, burned hundreds of churches and massacred thousands of Christians. Nigeria hosted the 'Islam in Africa Conference' and was officially recognized as an Islamic state by the World Islamic Organization. Now after the first free elections in Nigerian history a Christian President has come to power.

Seeking to impose its policies of Islamisation and Arabisation throughout Sudan, the National Islamic Front (one of only three governments in the world to recognize the Taliban) waged Jihad against the Christian Black South for over 20 years, killing an estimated 2 million Christians. When U.S. and coalition forces attacked Afghanistan the NIF saw the handwriting on the wall and sought a cease-fire with the South. When the allies went after Saddam the NIF began peace talks with the South, but held off signing them until after last November's election and a Bush victory (see ITM January '05).

Some years ago, Saudi Arabia paid off Malawi's national debt in exchange for choosing their next government. Surprise, surprise it was an intolerant Muslim regime and things went downhill fast. The Saudi's used petrol dollars to build hundreds of mosques across the country and were on the verge of introducing Sharia law. Fortunately the Constitution stipulates a two-term limit for the President and Muslim Muluzi had to step down, although he remained Chairman of the UDF political party. The people elected a born-again Christian, President Bingu Wa Mutharika, to replace him.

President Bingu soon realized he was being manipulated by Muslim Middle-Eastern elements controlling their UDF party. After a nearly successful attempt to assassinate him, President Bingu resigned from the party. Other Christian members followed his example and together formed a new Christian party, which leaves the UDF impotent. So Malawi, the last country in Africa to become Muslim, is the first to officially break away from Islam and return to its Christian roots. The cracks are showing up everywhere.

We cannot overlook the recent "Cedar Revolution" in Lebanon, the only Arab country that was ever a democracy when Christians were the majority there. The flame of freedom was extinguished when Syria invaded in the 70s. Intensified persecution of Christians led many to leave and the Muslims gained a majority. Now liberty is making a comeback in Lebanon.

Last year Libya suddenly renounced terrorism and is seeking to cooperate with the West in general and the U.S. in particular. Still more cracks.

The above catalogue of countries represents a very significant portion of former Muslim strongholds. Without a doubt, 9/11 was a tragedy for all concerned. America lost more citizens in that unprovoked and cowardly attack than at Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941. Now it's Islam's turn to lose. The authoritarian Muslim medieval and retrogressive system that would turn the clock back a thousand years in character, culture and costume is suddenly in disarray. People want to be free to choose who will represent them. Christianity offers them that freedom long denied by Islam.

Add to the above other contemporary elements that are currently shaking the foundations of Islam. Mel Gibson's The Passion of the Christ was shown throughout the Muslim world openly screened in shopping mall cinemas. There has been a phenomenal response to SAT-7, a Christian mission broadcasting Gospel programs in Arabic throughout the Middle East. More missionaries are focused today on the Muslim world than ever before. More Christians are praying for the Muslim world than ever before. Since 9/11 more critical books exposing the falsehood and lies of Islam have been written than in previous centuries.

Dr. Peter Hammond, author of Slavery, Terrorism & Islam – The Historical Roots and Contemporary Threat, notes, "We have begun to see the first cracks in the monolithic empire of Islam which cannot survive freedom and the Quran cannot withstand critical investigation."
